Dear Secretary of State,

Cost of Court Transcripts

We are writing to you regarding the cost of obtaining court transcripts and to urge the Government to make provisions in the Victims' Bill to ensure victims are able to access these transcripts free of charge.

Victims are often charged thousands of pounds to obtain a transcript of Crown Court proceedings. Juliana Terlizzi was quoted £7,500 to obtain a transcript of the 10-day trial in which she was a victim of rape, whilst another victim has been quoted an astonishing £22,000.

We are pleased that the Ministry of Justice acknowledges that "accessing transcripts from proceedings in serious criminal cases is not only a fundamental right of victims but is also essential for maintaining transparency and accountability within the justice system".¹ However, at present, the cost of obtaining a transcript of court proceedings is a major barrier to justice for many victims and bereaved families.

Victims routinely do not attend trial. Some are actively discouraged from attending, whilst others face the prospect of having to sit by the defendant's family and friends in the courtroom should they do so.

Without a transcript of court proceedings, victims are unable to find out exactly what happened during the trial which can make it very difficult for them to come to terms with how the verdict was reached.

Existing provisions in place to make transcripts available - such as providing a transcript at the Judge's discretion or publishing sentencing remarks in certain cases - are insufficient or unaffordable. Not only is this a barrier to justice, it is also a major barrier to victims' recovery.

Victims and campaigners have long been calling on the Government to take action to address this injustice, but no progress has been made. Meanwhile, the Scottish Government has committed to a pilot scheme to waive court transcript fees for victims of sexual violence.

We therefore urge you, the Secretary of State for Justice make provisions in the Victims' Bill to enable all crime victims to request a transcript of the court's summing up and sentencing remarks, so long as the trial took place in a court where the proceedings are recorded.

Yours sincerely
